This is the night for Yahweh

by John Forbis in the January 27, 2004 issue

The dough is not fermented; provisions are not made; and yet, it is time.
The Egyptians are pressing us.

The bell is ringing.
I curse to myself,
looking down at my watch.
The bell insists. I am afraid.

OK, OK, I say aloud (for such curses can't be uttered by a monk) walking to the church.

Egypt is stripped.
The mind empties
like a slow leak
And we begin the long journey . . .
