Olin Lake

by Shari Wagner in the May 18, 2010 issue

Behind us, the channel half-clogged by bullhead lilies slips back into the smoke of yellow tamaracks clouding the shore and we glide on the silk of a dream so deep, herring break the surface from eighty feet below.

I am this hand skimming the water. I am these eyes dazzled by light.

I am you whom I loved before the seas were parted.

I am in the creak of wood, old harmony of oars.
