

The sign

by Jeanne Murray Walker in the May 31, 2011 issue

Give me a sign, I pray, and then I see For Sale (Price Reduced) and smile at the Almighty's roguish sense of humor, thinking how he must adore us skeptics, stretching out his carpenter's hands to let St. Thomas probe the nail holes, stick his finger deep in the bleeding gash, feel the spiky bones and fly through that little space to faith. Two thousand years bereft of Jesus' body, I need a sign, although I wonder, could any sign nail down for good how a God-man walked this curving earth?

And anyway, concerning signs, how childlike my belief in narrative, as if the question's always first, and then the answer leaps in perfect sequence. Sequence, which is nothing but time's lackey! So I give up narrative, however lovely to look around—but I worry.

Where? Suppose the sign arrived last week, for instance, that spider threading sunlight by our garage, that writhing knot of fire? Or last spring in Carol's row of jewel-like tulips. Suppose it was that rag of human song blown by as we wandered Bleeker Street with Charlie, just back from war. Or the muffled cracking as my body breaks beneath the press of time.

Not this, not that—I admit,

I'm down to rummaging the world for nail holes. Maybe to list what's missing is to begin to understand what's here.
