The farm wife eats out at Marner's Six Mile Café by Shari Wagner in the May 14, 2014 issue

Widowed farmers cram the table near the peanut butter pies, but I prefer the back booth beneath a pike framed with flowers.

Under a coffee cup's "Start your day with Jesus," I find Topeka Seed & Stove.

Once, when it was crowded, we ate in the kitchen where an Amish cook beats batter while flipping eggs and watching toast. Annie doesn't bring us menus. She knows the girls and I will order pancakes with cinnamon butter faces. When my sisters visit, they say, "Let's go someplace with atmosphere."

They mean a chain near the interstate where they decorate with movie stars and license plates, where the booths are so tall, you can't see your neighbors.
