

Thursday digest

November 10, 2011

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- An interview with Islam specialist Charles Kurzman: "Terrorism is not nearly as widespread as many people feared it would be after 9/11."
- Amy Frykholm responds to the Atlantic cover story on women who don't marry: "Writer Kate Bolick is 39 and single; I've been married since I was 24. By the logic of her article, this means I won something in the 'dating game' and she lost something."
- Footage of a brave and wise Penn State student
- Lois Huey-Heck on Richard Vignola's art

In the news:

- Why Penn State is \(and isn't\) like the Catholic Church
- Black seminaries embrace hip-hop
- NCC installs young Lutheran, veteran Baptist as leaders
- Muslim group banned in Britain ahead of planned demonstration
- Bishops gear up for fight with Obama