Wednesday digest

November 23, 2011

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- Kathleen Hirsch on Advent with a toddler: "I decided our family's Christmas would be simple and spirit-centered. Green to parenting, I defined spiritual as anything that allowed me a minute to reflect on what, beyond the laundry, mattered." (subscription required)
- Beverly Roberts Gaventa's seven-word gospel: "In Christ, God's 'yes' defeats our 'no'."
- Steve Thorngate on the Democrats' improved bargaining position over the federal budget: "As ineffectual as Congress is, there's one time you can count on it to rise above do-nothing-ness: when it's approaching the can it kicked down the road earlier."
- Robin Lovin reviews Amos Yong: "Pentecostalism expanded from a small revival movement to a global presence comparable in its extent and variety to Roman Catholicism or Anglicanism. Yet few people in mainstream U.S. churches know much about it." (subscription required)
- Adam Copeland raises some questions about Thanksgiving: "Giving thanks...to whom? Giving thanks....for what?"

In the news:

- Poll: Mitt Romney's Mormonism could be a primary problem
- Number of Somali refugees declining due to aid and rainfall
- Clergy, too, battle porn addiction -- often alone
- Workplace religious complaints double over 10 years