

Kenda Creasy Dean on what it means to be almost Christian

By Carol Howard Merritt

December 2, 2011

I feel really lucky. Why? Because I co-host a podcast. That means when I read a great book, I have an excuse to call the author and ask her or him if we can chat about it. And you know what's even better? They say yes!

This week, Derrick Weston, my partner in this Internet radio endeavor, spoke to Kenda Creasy Dean about her book Almost Christian. Kenda is a Professor of Youth, Church and Culture at Princeton Seminary.

What are today's youth saying about their faith? How does what they profess compare to our historic creeds? What are they telling us about the beliefs of their parents and our church? Kenda Creasy Dean helps us to learn how youth reflect the faith of our communities. Plus, you won't want to miss the insightful thoughts of the Two Friars and a Fool (Aric Clark, Doug Hagler, and Nick Larson).

You can download the interview on iTunes or listen to it here.