

Monday digest

February 27, 2012

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- Thomas G. Long on Christopher Hitchens, idol smasher: "Christopher Hitchens was an unrelenting unbeliever to the end. But Ross Douthat claims that everything about Hitchens points to an embrace of life and a refusal to give in to despair." (subscription required)
- Lauren F. Winner reviews Elizabeth Clark's book on the discipline of early church history (subscription required)
- New CCblogger MaryAnn McKibben Dana on whether or not the internet kills community
- Phyllis Kersten blogs the lectionary

In the news:

- Re-branding a religion is hard to do, and not always successful
- NYPD's Muslim surveillance extended well beyond New York
- In Cameroon, faith leaders fear expansion of extremism from Nigeria
- Repairs, funds are slow-going at quake-damaged National Cathedral
- Richard Dawkins says he's not entirely sure God doesn't exist