

(Re)imagining Christianity

By Carol Howard Merritt

April 28, 2012

Brainstorming women, armed with their Sharpies and poster boards, are going to battle. If you haven't heard, there is a "war on women."

Is this hyperbole? Is this "war on women" tagline merely something that can unite the various feminist waves into one tsunami that has real influence? Is this "war on women" a cheap trick by liberal political operatives to highlight how out-of-touch and extreme conservatives have become on social issues? If there's a war going on, who is attacking women anyways?

The sad truth? Christianity wages war on women. How are we doing it? (Read more at Adam Walker Cleaveland's blog here.)