Wednesday digest

July 18, 2012

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- Ralph Wood looks at several books on John Henry Newman: "The spate of books on Newman shows that there is little hope of settling arguments about him—or about Benedict's understanding of him." (subscription required)
- David Heim on the fading prospects of a two-state solution in Israel-Palestine
- Steve Thorngate on Rachel Held Evans and the mainline
- Lois Huey-Heck on artwork by Carmen Phillipe-Welton (subscription required)
- "Creation," a poem by Philip Kolin

In the news:

- Pennsylvania atheist threatens to desecrate Quran over state bill
- Despite doubters, mainline Protestant churches are poised for success
- St. Paul Saints baseball team to become 'Mr. Paul Aints' on atheist night
- Evangelical author sees a "Mormonizing of America"