

CC recommends: Theology & spirituality

selected by David Heim and Richard A. Kauffman

This review appears in the December 14, 2010 issue.

In Review

Practice Resurrection: A Conversation on Growing Up in Christ

Eugene H. Peterson
Eerdmans

jesus freak

SARA MILES

Jesus Freak

By Sara Miles
Jossey-Bass

Christ the Key

Kathryn Tanner
Cambridge University Press

American Grace

By Robert D. Putnam and David E. Campbell
Simon & Schuster

Hannah's Child: A Theologian's Memoir

Stanley Hauerwas
Eerdmans

Walter Brueggemann

OUT OF

Out of Babylon

By Walter Brueggemann
Abingdon

Dwelling with Philippians

by Elizabeth Steele Halstead, Paul Detterman, Joyce Borger and John D. Witvliet, eds.
Eerdmans

Common Prayer

By Shane Claiborne, Jonathan Wilson-Hartgrove and Enuma Okoro
Zondervan

JOHN DOMINIC CROSSAN

author of Jesus: A Revolutionary Biography

The GREATEST PRAYER

Rediscovering the Revolutionary Message of
THE LORD'S PRAYER

Our Father in heaven hallowed be your name

The Greatest Prayer

By John Dominic Crossan

HarperOne

Christianity

By Diarmaid MacCulloch
Viking

Eugene H. Peterson, Practice Resurrection: A Conversation on Growing Up in Christ. Every volume by Peterson is a gift of pastoral and biblical wisdom. This book, centered on the letter to the Ephesians, is about getting beyond the rhetoric of "new life in Christ" and beyond disappointment with the church to focus on how to develop a mature faith. "Maybe the church as we have it provides the very conditions and proper company congenial for growing up in Christ, for becoming mature, for arriving at the measure of the stature of Christ. Maybe God knows what he is doing, giving us church, this church."

Sara Miles, Jesus Freak: Feeding, Healing, Raising the Dead. Like her previous book, Take This Bread, this volume is grounded in Miles's work at a church food pantry, where she's continually reminded of the sacramental quality of sharing food. Miles sometimes feels like a fundamentalist among her liberal Christian friends, because she can't stop talking about Jesus and his presence amid the broken lives she encounters. "Jesus keeps calling us to share in God's work of touching, healing, feeding, and mercy: not in some imaginary or theoretical way, but physically, in order that resurrection can happen."

Kathryn Tanner, Christ the Key. Tanner's deep knowledge of Catholic and Protestant sources leads to a powerful restatement of the centrality of Jesus Christ for Christian thought. She presents Christ as the model and the means for how God's image is impressed on human lives and for how Christians come to share in the life of the Trinity. Tanner's work is not easy reading, but her theological scope is impressive as she describes the relation of nature and grace and the meaning of the incarnation and the cross.

Diarmaid MacCulloch, Christianity: The First Three Thousand Years. This monumental work on Christianity, companion to a six-part BBC series, focuses less on church history and more on the faith of common believers. The subtitle isn't a misprint: MacCulloch begins with an account of Christianity's religious and cultural roots. While the book moves toward a global rather than a Euro-American perspective, the book still provides a robust history of Catholic, Orthodox and Protestant traditions. (See the review in this issue.)

Robert D. Putnam and David E. Campbell, American Grace: How Religion Divides and Unites Us. This comprehensive portrait of religion in the U.S. since the 1960s shows Americans to be religiously diverse, religiously devout and religiously tolerant—an unusual combination. Religious intermingling fosters the tolerance, the authors argue. Yet there is a religious divide that expresses itself in the public square. Among the more striking findings is the rising number of young adults who have left formal participation in religion. Overall, the number of "nones," people who claim no religious affiliation, is growing sharply.

Stanley Hauerwas, Hannah's Child: A Theologian's Memoir. Hauerwas has a compelling story to tell, and he tells it well. He grew up as the son of a Texas bricklayer and went on to teach at one of the most highly regarded divinity schools and to be named by Time magazine the "best theologian in America." The reader learns how a Methodist from Texas became a "high church Mennonite" and an outspoken proponent of Christian pacifism. One of the book's more poignant features is Hauerwas's account of his first wife, who was mentally ill and apparently abusive, and the efforts he made to assure his son a healthy upbringing.

Walter Brueggemann, Out of Babylon.

Just as the Jews needed to struggle with the seductions and insistences of the Babylonian empire, says Brueggemann, Christians must resist the American empire. To discern what that struggle might look like, he reflects on the Babylon motif in the biblical imagination, and in the end concludes that the history of exile is less helpful as a model for the church today than the history of Jewish life under the Persian empire, which called for a balance of accommodation and resistance and for maintaining a distinct communal identity.

Elizabeth Steele Halstead, Paul Detterman, Joyce Borger and John D. Witvliet, eds., Dwelling with Philippians: A Conversation with Scripture through Image and Word. This is not a scholarly interpretation of Paul's letter to Philippi but rather a multidimensional approach that lends itself to individual mediation or small group discussion. It is filled with full-color art, classic and contemporary. Along with commentary and questions, it supplies quotations and poems that evoke further reflection.

Shane Claiborne, Jonathan Wilson-Hartgrove and Enuma Okoro, Common Prayer: A Liturgy for Ordinary Radicals. Claiborne and Wilson-Hartgrove are both associated with the new monastic movement, and they believe, as does Okoro, that liturgy has the power to transcend cultural, national, ethnic and denominational divides and to transform lives and communities. This prayerbook provides morning prayers for an entire year, a midday prayer repeated throughout the year and a selection of evening prayers. Additional occasional prayers include one for the "death of someone killed in the neighborhood." A further resource is commonprayer.net.

John Dominic Crossan, The Greatest Prayer: Rediscovering the Revolutionary Message of the Lord's Prayer. The Lord's Prayer is both a revolutionary manifesto and a hymn of hope—revolutionary because it asks how things must change on earth "so that all God's people have a fair, equitable, and just proportion of God's world," hopeful because it is revolutionary. Crossan says the prayer reveals that the God who is "the divine Householder of the world house is a God of nonviolent justice." Crossan focuses on the Matthean version, since it is the most familiar. As usual, Crossan is provocative and clever, erudite yet accessible.