

Easter alone

by J. Barrie Shepherd in the May 20, 2020 issue

There is something to be said for solitary.
Those initial appearances, you may recall, were not made before acclaiming throngs with sounding brasses, immaculate ranks of lilies, golden banners, alleluias and the like, but to one or two, three at the most, battered, broken souls seeking solace for their grief and fear.

This morning's virus-isolated sunrise, plague bare of all the customary celebration, friendly handshakes, warm embraces—He is risen . . . risen indeed!—finds me at Atlantic's edge, sole company the occasional chickadee, my foraging terrier, light breeze and gentle waves against the rocks my organ repertory, awakening bird song through the trees my antiphonal call and response.

No one was missing.
This vast community of life and light, flowing liquid and unyielding rock, one immense, eternal benediction, holding me close—despite—informing me—full and clear—that all is given, all is now, and everything is yet to be.
