Vernal pool

by Sarah Rossiter in the April 20, 2022 issue

Here nothing moves, the water waiting, still as glass, amid the cattails' silent stalks while over there across the sea, fire shreds the sky, exploding as buildings crumble, mired in blood.

So how to hold the all of it, the killing field and this spring pool where water shivers once and wakes to wood frogs' rising croaking chorus that, startled by my presence, stops—only to begin again.