

In Advent

by Jean Janzen in the December 12, 2006 issue

Among the drift of lists across my desk, this one—"call the cemetery for reservations," a narrow room for my body at final rest.

I will ask, is there an open space somewhere near my mother or brother? Room for two, perhaps, among the roots of cedars under the sod and the one who now rolls over it on his mower, mustache damp in December fog, his headphones full of love songs.

We're in the time of waiting for our salvation, that slow movement toward the final night, when light is nothing but breath inside a cave, earth hiding its treasure until we are ready to receive it. That place we travel toward like the Magi, weary and expectant, laying our gifts on the straw.
