

Slow: Animal crossing

by Sue Ellen Kuzma in the December 15, 2009 issue

Just after we've communally stuffed and thanked, the first sleet comes down in shanks of dirty lambs' wool, rude messy sheets, slathering the cars we hunch in, hurrying again, against some febrile deadline, dodging the poor squiggling squirrel trying to shoot across the heavy-metal trafficked road that intersects his world.

He seems to have made it, tail on.
We may, too, make it home, untripped this time by our own haste, knowing in some dark artery that the meal we need,
the company against the cold, like the animals in the Ark, are all waiting, like Advent, inside the small rooms of the remaining calendar, we pass through, one by one.