

Pope downplays threat of Vatican scrutiny of nuns

by Alessandro Speciale in the July 10, 2013 issue

Weeks after authorizing a continued investigation of American nuns, Pope Francis told a group of nuns and priests from Latin America not to worry if they found themselves under similar scrutiny.

The pope's purported remarks came during a meeting with top officials of the Latin American Conference of Religious (CLAR) on June 6. During the meeting, Francis seemed to refer to the Vatican investigation of an American nuns' group, the Leadership Conference of Women Religious, while telling the Latin American delegates not to worry should they find themselves the target of a similar investigation.

"They will make mistakes, they will make a blunder, this will pass! Perhaps even a letter of the Congregation for the Doctrine [of the Faith] will arrive for you, telling you that you said such or such thing. . . . But do not worry. Explain whatever you have to explain, but move forward."

In what was seen as one of the defining acts of Pope Benedict XVI's papacy, the Vatican's doctrinal office issued a "doctrinal assessment" that criticized the LCWR for not speaking out strongly enough against gay marriage, abortion and women's ordination.

The Vatican also chided the U.S. nuns for "serious doctrinal problems" among many LCWR members and said LCWR conferences suffered from "a prevalence of certain radical feminist themes incompatible with the Catholic faith."

A partial account of the meeting was published June 9 by the Chilean magazine Reflexión y Liberación, and later translated into English by the Rorate Cæli website.

Francis also reportedly admitted the existence of a "gay lobby" within the Vatican and confessed that he is "disorganized" when it comes to administrative matters such as reforming the Roman Curia. The Vatican's chief spokesman, Federico

Lombardi, on June 11 said the meeting was “of a private nature” and “therefore, I have no statement to make on the content of the conversation.”

According to the Reflexión y Liberación account, which seems to consist of notes from the meeting rather than a word-for-word transcript, Francis admitted that his task as head of the church’s central administration, the Roman Curia, is “difficult.”

In the Curia there are “holy people,” he said, but “there also is a stream of corruption.” “The ‘gay lobby’ is mentioned, and it is true, it is there. . . . We need to see what we can do.”

Reports of a “gay lobby” appeared in the Italian press last year in the context of the so-called Vatileaks affair that led to the arrest of Pope Benedict XVI’s personal butler for leaking confidential documents to the press. —RNS