

Tuesday digest

October 25, 2011

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blog, news, link blog. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- James Harnish on a lawyer's journey to church: "There was no hostility in Larry's question. He had not rejected religion; he simply didn't need it. He had moved along the typical path of an upwardly mobile professional, his life consumed by work." (subscription required)
- Carol Howard Merritt on the pastor as writer: "After a couple of years of sweating over each syllable, I suddenly needed the words. I hungered to write them. On vacations, my family urged me to take a break and I became cranky. What happened? How did the words begin to grow like wildflowers that I no longer had to coddle?"
- Mark Labberton's lectionary column for Sunday, November 6: "I love being free. I especially love autonomous freedom—the delight of pursuing and doing what I want. The problem is that autonomous freedom is near the root of what the Bible calls sin." (subscription required)
- What's the gospel in seven words?

In the news:

- Muslims call for reforms 10 years after Patriot Act

- Hindu festival of lights goes mainstream