

Wednesday digest

February 15, 2012

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- Our latest "Ministry in the 21st century" interview is with Scott Kershner of Holden Village: "Religious commitments are no longer taken for granted as part of North American people's lives. So space opens up to ask very basic and interesting questions." (subscription required)
- Amy Frykholm reviews Kathryn Lofton's book on Oprah: "Until I read Oprah: The Gospel of an Icon, I would not have said that I was a connoisseur of the world of O."
- David Heim on the Catholic bishops' changing arguments against the contraception mandate
- Steve Thorngate on an emerging midwestern menace

In the news:

- Tennessee faith leaders ask presidential candidates to avoid immigration rhetoric
- Bishops' contraception objections fail their church's own moral reasoning
- You've heard of evangelicals, but just who are they?
- New York Knicks' Jeremy Lin dubbed the 'Taiwanese Tebow'