

CC recommends

Books in the December 11, 2007 issue

In Review

40-Day Journey with Dietrich Bonhoeffer

Ronald Klug, ed.
Augsburg Fortress

I Want to Live These Days with You: A Year of Daily Devotions

Dietrich Bonhoeffer

Westminster John Knox

Marking the Hours: English People and Their Prayers, 1240-1570

Eamon Duffy

Yale University Press

Not Ashamed of the Gospel: Sermons from Paul's Letter to the Romans

Fleming Rutledge
Eerdmans

Water from a Deep Well: Christian Spirituality from Early Martyrs to Modern Missionaries

Gerald L. Sittser
InterVarsity

The 1979 Book of Common Prayer and the NRSV Bible with the Apocrypha

Oxford University Press

The Divine Hours, Pocket Edition

Phyllis Tickle

Oxford University Press

The Night Offices: Prayers for the Hours from Sunset to Sunrise

Phyllis Tickle

Oxford University Press

Take Our Moments and Our Days: An Anabaptist Prayer Book, Ordinary Time

Arthur Paul Boers et al., ed.
Herald

Two testaments to Bonhoeffer's enduring significance. As the title suggests, 40-Day Journey is especially suited for a concentrated period of reflection and journaling, such as during Advent or Lent. Each day includes a passage from Bonhoeffer, a scripture text, questions, intercessions and a prayer. The book of daily devotions include a year's worth of short readings from Bonhoeffer, matched to the calendar year but also arranged to fit the church year.

The Book of Hours was the most popular book of the late Middle Ages, according to Duffy. The contents of the Book of Hours—psalms, other biblical passages, prayers, a calendar of saints' days—reveal much about the prayer life and religious contexts of the people who used this collection. What most captures Duffy's attention are the personalized jottings by various owners of the Book of Hours. For instance, Thomas More jotted thoughts in his copy as he waited in the Tower of London to be executed. This is a substantive historical work about spirituality which is also inspiring. It includes many beautiful illustrations from various editions of the Book of Hours.

These sermons, which Rutledge preached from Romans over many years in different settings, are substantive, theological and literate, and relevant to the times in which they were delivered. And they're not 10-minute quickies either. No one could accuse Rutledge of theological revisionism; nevertheless, her interpretation of Romans has been shaped by newer Pauline studies, especially Ernst Käsemann's realization that justification connotes not merely acquittal, but making right what was wrong. This is not a systematic study of the letter to the Romans; there are multiple sermons on some passages, none at all on other passages. In fact, Romans 15 and 16 are excluded entirely. While this book could just as easily have been categorized as theology, reading these sermons is spiritually formative.

Sittser, an evangelical with an ecumenical spirit, recognizes the riches of the historical tradition. He examines figures and movements from the early Christian martyrs, through the desert mothers and fathers, to Benedictine monastics, Catholic saints, medieval lay movements, the Reformation and modern missionary pioneers. Sittser admits that he could just as well have written a book about the weaknesses of each of these people and movements, but he's chosen to focus on their strengths—what we can all learn from them.

A beautiful book to hold and behold, with bonded leather in a partial basket-weave style and gilt-edged pages. This is a relatively compact volume that combines the Book of Common Prayer with the NRSV.

People who have become accustomed to using Tickle's trilogy The Divine Hours will appreciate this paperback edition. It provides a week's worth of daily prayers, covering the seven offices of the day. The Night Offices covers the midnight office, the night watch office (sometime between 1:30 and 4:30 a.m.) and the dawn office (sometime between 4:30 and 7:30 a.m.) for the whole year.

The prayers in this volume cover a four-week cycle, with each week having a focus on a particular aspect of the ministry and teachings of Jesus: the Lord's Prayer, the Beatitudes, the parables, and signs and wonders. The prayers, which are for the morning and evening, are especially suited to group use.

More recommendations:

Books on theology

Memoirs and biographies

Fiction books

Children's literature

DVDs

Classical music

Pop Christmas music