

The kingdom of grass

by Philip C. Kolin in the April 25, 2018 issue

Old Walt called it God's handkerchief: green vistas everywhere.
Glistening mermaids singing of spring in the mown river air.

A bouquet of chartreuse for summer's banquet, stars and moon liltng across hillsides, prairies, plains, and valleys.

How glorious if earth coursed through lush pampas the year round, but it must compass the dark seasons, too—brown stubble beards in November's drizzle, the prickly dismantling of fall.
And the icy comforters of winter over a cramped crypt of stark seeds.

But then early spring's tears for their return and the bravo of April's flourish, green shafts with a crown of soft rain, the kingdom of grass come again.
