

Twinflower

by Paul Willis in the May 9, 2018 issue

(Linnaea borealis)

Who would guess, with your pair of downcast, blousy blossoms so close to your matted leaves, that you are actually a shrub?

No hiding in these bushes.
But you bank the berm

of this irrigation ditch in the forest, witness to water hurrying from creek to orchard.

At least there are two of you, every time—for each fork in the channel, a second opinion.

—Lake Chelan National Recreation Area