

Crossing Rio Grande

by Tricia Gates Brown in the January 15, 2020 issue

No time for modesty when they say take off your clothes. And here you dress in the dark, keep eyes closed making love with your wife.

Every stitch, they say, even the pregnant ones, even kids. Other side, tack-cloth jeans shimmied over wet skin faster than a glance.
No tell-tale river trail. This land full of promise, promise, and naked you enter. Your life of merit just hen-scratch in the sand. No longer straight As, boyhood entrepreneur, leader, niño. From here, you build on this crime, on chaos and concealment of your sad, inevitable gift. What can they even know of such dignity, the reaching and pulling, the leaping into air as thin as bliss?

What do they see of love's wild resolve or the looping, malignant chain of need?