

Settling

by Luci Shaw in the January 2024 issue

A writer lifts her head to the sounds of a recorded voice reading poetry: the words brush against her ears, seeking a mind to settle in. She notices how in the evening, the light filters between the trees, fluidly, finding its way down to the ground, the way water flows from the tap between her fingers, and settles, pooling where it falls.

Her cat, settled in her lap, purrs: "Thank you for being warm, and kind, and for the new poems you are writing while you scratch behind my ears. Now, do it again. Again. Just don't stop."