Re-imagine

by Bonnie Thurston in the February 2024 issue

Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth. Revelation 21:1

The world has become a sad and sordid place full of absence, longing for what might have been. We are scattered, shattered, broken as bone china cups dropped on a tile floor. I shake accusatory fingers at the formless void, from somewhere out beyond imagining hear a terrible Eloquence:

"What have you done with what I gave you? You made the pieces. Now pick them up, re-imagine them as fragments of possibility. Fit them together anew. Re-create my image in your damaged hearts."